CLEVELAND, Ohio -- Gov. John Kasich's budget would give Ohio school districts nearly $400 million less state aid in 2013 than they received this year, a Plain Dealer analysis shows.

The Plain Dealer published a story Wednesday explaining how the brunt of these cuts would impact Northeast Ohio.

The governor's administration released the details of this plan as five separate tables, making it difficult for many people -- including district administrators, parents and other taxpayers -- to figure out how it would affect their communities and others around the state.

So on Wednesday the newspaper calculated the impact for other districts across Ohio. These findings can be viewed below in an interactive map and on a chart.

(NOTE: Instead of rounding state funding to the nearest dollar, The Plain Dealer rounded all of the dollar amounts, which are detailed below, downwards. For example: Columbus will receive $278,323,396.61. Rather than round this to $278,323,397, it has been rounded to $278,323,396.)
